The prestigious Southbank Centre is hosting a new and groundbreaking play from 12 to 22 this April.

This drama, movingly portraying the struggle of Tamil-speaking people, is the first time that the genocide and its aftermath will be brought to the mainstream and will bring Tamil issues to the forefront for a new audience. You can find more details about on the website of Southbank centre.

Tamil Solidarity has been invited to use this opportunity to bring Tamil issues to the audience.

Tamil Solidarity will participate in a symposium prior to the staging of Looking for Kool on 20 April.

In addition Tamil Solidarity will exhibit campaign material and photographs at the Southbank Centre while the play is running.

Please contact us if you can help with any of this or to participate.

Please also book your tickets in advance.

Bearing witness to her world turned upside down, a defiant Mrs. U creates 'The Coconut Grove'; part party, part family album, part secret ritual, all make shift, all imagination.

She has survived war on her wits and on kool, the comfort stew that binds her community. Imagine yourself a war tourist, entering her world, drinking her kool, and witnessing the vagaries of life and war. Can you fulfill her poignant request?

Looking for Kool is a one-woman show, unfolding in the secret labyrinth of one of Southbank Centre's underground spaces.
